President Tom Noyes yesterday received from Joe Cantillon a letter which sounds like the casualty list of a railroad wreck. According to the manager, there is hardly a member of the Washington club who has not met with some sort of mishap Ha since the team left home, and, although several of the players are suffering from only minor injuries, Otis Clymer, Charlie Jones, and Charlie Smith have not been so fortunate.

For more than a year a badly twisted ankle has worried Clymer. He received the injury early last season while with the Pittsburg Pirates, and was unlucky New York .. enough to give it a severe wrench in one of the games at Chicago. He was immediately taken off the field, since that time has been confined to the bench. He has rounded to rather encouragingly, but Cantillon has insisted upon his remaining out of the game, as the manager does not feel that he should take any long chances with a man as valuable as Clymer has shown himself, to be given before the control of the same as the manager does not feel that he should take any long chances with a man as valuable as Clymer has shown himself, to be given before the control of the same as the manager does not feel that he should take any long chances with a man as valuable as Clymer has shown himself, to be given before the control of the same as the manager does not feel that he should take any long chances with three on bases and the same of the shown himself to be since joining the Nationals. Clymer is a big man, along BOSTON WINS IN 16 INNING the lines of Mike Kelley, and because of his great weight is more likely to injure an ankle than were he a smaller man.

Besides doing brilliant work in the Takes First Game of Series from St field, Clymer was hitting over the .500 mark, so the team was especially unfortunate to lose him right in the midst of the long trip abroad.

from the line-up some Western writers jumped at the conclusion that the player had wandered from the straight and narrow path, but this Cantillon denies absolutely, At Pittsburg, Clymer was continually in hot water with Manager valuable players on the local rolls.
